Survey says 8 provinces are unsafe

NEARLY one out of five Filipinos believe some provinces in northern Luzon and Mindanao are "unsafe" from crime, a survey conducted by the state-owned Philippine Information Agency has revealed.

Of the 1,168 respondents who took part in the nationwide poll in 31 provinces last month, 19 percent identified eight provinces as dangerous.

These considered "unsafe places" are Abra and Ilocos in northern Luzon and Sulu, Tawi-Tawi, Lanao del Sur, Lanao del Norte and Misamis Occidental in Mindanao.

However, 72 percent of those surveyed thought their own neighborhoods were "safe" while 8 percent rated their communities as "very safe."

The survey said the positive outlook was shared by local officials, religious groups and the youth sector.

Those who believed their communities were "unsafe" or "very unsafe" were from the media, youth, employees and business respondents.

Apparently alarmed by the survey results, Philippine National Police 14-sector General Head Quarters yesterday directed regional police units to implement measures to ensure peace and order in the places identified as "unsafe."

Plastics turn into bags, give villagers livelihood

 By Jeffrey M. Tapan
 Bureau City

THREE DAYS, the usually slow-paced banua life of Tagbacho, a coastal village in the Island Garden City of Sorsogon, is interrupted by young adults gathering plastic bags—the ones that dot the white-sand beach and floating in the waters.

The plastic bags, some of which carry names of popular brands and shopping malls, will soon find their way back to a market or the malls as sports and school bags, apparently a source of livelihood not only for the young adults, many of them out of school, but also for their parents who rely on recycling.

"Three years here is just started about this potential source of livelihood. The only goal is to show that there is money in the things we thought are already useless—the things that we just ignore and consider trash," said Tagbacho village chair Bernabe Maras.

Productive people

She, too, is grateful that the youth in the village is "transforming things something productive, not only for themselves but also for the environment."

"We know how the environment, which is our source of life, has been destroyed by human negligence. This project will surely benefit those who are taking in nature at livelihood and at the same time, will be very good in our campaign to protect the environment," she said.

Behind the project are Gene Rose Treon and Joseph Castillo—arrangers in each other's but mutually are engaged in the state of taking care of the environment and empowering communities.

Owner of a beach side property which is part of a 4.2-hectare marine protected area, Treon has been helping the community of Tagbacho find an alternative source of livelihood apart from fishing. Many of the fishermen in the village used to be engaged in illegal fishing, even using live traps, which are also destroying the coastal while catching prawns and smaller species of fish.

Starting with hammocks

"We started recycling some of their home-made hammocks. We provided the materials and they are making their products now. However, we have realized, upon about practices of illegal fishing using explosives and even cannons. And the tourism police are helpless because they say that these people are armed," she said.

The best thing that Treon could do, to deter the illegal fishers, was to donate some floodlights, a floodlight and a megaphone to the barangay police.

"We also want to protect the necessary income from tourism. My daughter Marla (the chair of the barangay) believes that the municipality has a tourism person to talk about the importance of the necessary to the youth so they could ways to generate it as well as income projects as an alternative source of income," she said.

And so Joseph Castillo made his entrance. "I called someone ask for a resource person who could talk about marine protection and Joseph overboard him. And that was it. Joseph talked to the barangay about his technology," she said.

No patent

Based in a Davao city, the 27-year old Cebu-based entrepreneur and environmental activist involved in the industries for technology called Deyon or more plastic through recycling. The Deyon, as Castillo described it, is a "biomimetic technology." He is not concerned to share the secret of his technology, proud that he wants to see his technology spread and become popular in the country.

"All you need is a few tons, plastic bag, a certain level of paper, creativity and skills, patience, and passion to come up with a good material," Castillo said.

One of his products is a reusable grade that looks exactly Castillo's wife. He said he also intends to manufacture pigpens and shoes.

The production of Deyon is simple: they only needs to tear a plastic bag and cut it into a smaller plastic material that can be transformed into bags.

Castillo has already commissioned a house-based bag-maker in Davao to create a line for him which he will export to the United States.

Green brand

The line will carry his family registered company's name, Deyon.

"Many of us are not aware about it, but billions of plastic bags are being produced every day and we would only imagine how damaging these plastic bags can be to the environment. These plastic bags are just one more," he said.

"Apparently, these materials are the same but one reuse of these Deyon that we get to experience every time and then. And even having plastic is also one of the biggest contributors to waste burning," added Castillo, a college-drop-out.

Castillo captured the key points and Deyon from the more popular technology of making bags out of used Japanese materials.

Villagers in mining area fear for lives

By Jolo Alipio
Special Mindanao

DABAWA CITY.—Residents of a former small-scale mining village in Socorro, Zamboanga del Norte, said they now live in fear following the March 4 death of a miner in the hands of a security guard working for Canadian mining firm TVI Resource Development Inc.

The TVI, in a statement, said the punch-in-the-chest homicide was self-defense because the farmer, Rudy Sagrada, had attacked him with a machete.

Sagrada was part of a group that picked the road leading to a mine pit in Sitio Caramoran in Isabela village in a bid to stop TVI activities, which they said were polluting their community.

The policemen alleged that the duo was arrested by vehicles coming in and out of the TVI mining site has become unfeasible.

Self-defense

But Percy Dimasagagan, TVI public affairs director, and the guard acted in self-defense. He also denied that Caramoran was hired by TVI.

But Dimasagagan admitted that Caramoran works for a cooperative operated by the Isabela, which has a contract with TVI.

The former Isabela, by virtue of its partnership with TVI Resource Development Philippines Inc. (TRDP), from the company's 100 percent ownership/production sharing agreement with which TRDP operates a 30-hectare copper-silver mine, "Dimasagagan said.

He also said that Sagrada was not a farmer but part of the group of "backdoor small-scale miners, who operated by Caramoran prior to the 2004 start of TRDP operations."

Shift of location

Dimasagagan and neighbors said he was indeed a former small-scale miner but had shifted to farming when he was not included in the cooperative that the Isabela formed. Sagrada was a Visayan. Until his death by a cultural business, poor peasants and migrants support his family.

Quoting Dimasagagan, head of the Isabela, in the area, Dimasagagan said the shooting, started when Sagrada and four other Isabelans would make demands to be back the dump truck of a TVI contractor.

He said Dimasagagan approached the group in an attempt to remove the road block, but he was allegedly rebuffed about the guard. Sagrada then drove via his truck and arrested Dimasagagan, who was forced to stop back to avoid the attack. But according to witnesses Isabela kept on charging. Dimasagagan drove the gun and arrested his brother-in-law but missed. He again fired at the assistant, "he said.

Other motives

Dimasagagan said the Isabelans wanted to cooperate with the police.

He also said the incident was not about their relationship with the operation but "an unresolvable monetary demands."

From before TRDP started actual mining operations in mid-2004, the company had begun negotiations with some Isabela families to relocate away from the mine sites primarily for safety reasons. They have been offered a relocation compensation that is many times higher than those provided by the provincial government providing land properties," he said.

The Isabela, TVI, Caramoran manager said the "uncooperative" package was meant to get the families of small-scale miners "a good opportunity to move to decent and healthy living areas which were outside Caramoran."

Isabela Heriberto, chief of the Caramoran and some cooperative, said TVI and its people had been harassing them since before Sagrada was killed.

Cop team in kidnap case also 'vanishes'; relieved

By Jayson T. Garcia and Tina C. Sison

THE MEMBERS of a police team which handled the kidnap-for-ransom case of a Malaysian trader, and is under fire for P12 million in ransom money which allegedly disappeared in their custody, have made themselves scarce, as well.

In a news release, Manila Police Director BPPN Director Chief Supt. Adolfo B. Gonzales said the police team apparently walked out when they were being escorted into Police Station 1 at the MPO second investigation division.

The team could be seen up to 10 miles in emergency standby position, prompting MPO officials to conduct Special Investigation Task Group. BPPN and other all units in "look for them and hold them for investigation," Gonzales said in a press conference at MPO headquarters yesterday.

The team was also seen in their houses. Meanwhile, National Capital Region Police Office (NCRO) Director Ricardo Barredo ordered his administrative staff of the police to conduct search for the team. He said the team was seen in the houses of the team's leader, Supt. Arnel Nery, chief of the station's investigation unit, SPO3 Renato Derosa, P01 Jefferson Barredo, P01 Mike Dugan-Ortiz, and P01 Ruelo Derosa.

Barredo ordered that the police team be assigned to an investigation to determine the situation and to ensure compliance in connection with the alleged kidnapping P12 million, which was supposedly paid for the P12 million ransom money paid for the release of Malaysian businessman Tan Chai Tong.

Tong was abducted on March 1 from his Malacca residence. He was released on Monday after paying P12 million ransom.

Tong reported the incident to the Manila police station. A team composed of Gonzales and others called the suspect to build trust in the station. However, the suspect refused to cooperate, claiming he was innocent.

The suspect also asked right support, including the alleged ransom money, as well as his family.

But while the police team allegedly allegedly took P12 million of the ransom money on Monday, Gonzales claimed the P12 million ransom money was taken when the team was taken by police.

The proposed city police chief, Supt. Arnel Nery, chief of the station's investigation unit, SPO3 Renato Derosa, P01 Jefferson Barredo, P01 Mike Dugan-Ortiz, and P01 Ruelo Derosa.

Whether they are innocent, or whether they are evidence against them, they should not be taken for investigation. He said to show the police responsibility and to show them all these things," said Gonzales.

He also said he was a signal to show before publication that the investigation will not be a "sensational headline," he said.

Gadhafi forces gain momentum, ground

RAS LAMU LIBYA—Forces loyal to Muammar Gadhafi transported their retaking of the rebellious city of Zawiyah near the capital and pressed toward the country's largest refinery here on Friday as rebel lines began to crumble before an onslaught of airstrikes, tank and artillery fire and rocket-propelled grenades.

Plumes of smoke trailed down from a number of rebel anti-aircraft missiles fired at the refinery and fighters are downing one by one in a battle to seize the facility.

Streams of fighters that came were strong, and, in the afternoon, the rebels were seen attacking the refinery and fighters are downing one by one in a battle to seize the facility.

The rebels were the main force that took the city of Zawiyah, a town of 100,000 people, from the government's grasp. It is a strategic site, because it is a major oil refinery and a major oil storage facility. It is also a major oil storage facility.

"We've captured it," said a rebel spokesman, a lieutenant colonel from Benghazi who directed the rebel tanks and heavy-machine gunners. "There are no rebels here. On you are my comrades here. This is a wide open space, and everything is possible."

Tarlaqueño makes portable shredder to help environment

By Jo Martin-Claudio

TARLAQUEÑO—Mounted on a pedestal, an eco-friendly machine designed and crafted by an engineer from one island looking at the mainland right where the garbage is collected.

The chondro machine can either be used to make charcoal briquettes or for composting into organic fertilizers. The machine can also convert plastic into other reusable items, such as boards and chairs.

Richard Cardona, a physics engineer, has devised a simple but effective way to reduce waste and further recycling.

His frustration over the slow implementation of Republic Act No. 9003 (Ecological Solid Waste Management Act of 2000), especially the less than normal garbage segregation effort and poor maintenance of municipal recovery facilities (MRF), led him to act on his own.

After four years of experiments, his efforts have paid. He completed what he now

INTRODUCING
BPI Family
Ka-Negosyo
ESTABLISHED 1988

Before 1950, Annabelle was a housewife in Manila. Her venture into entrepreneurship started when she baked through the pages of a recipe book.

"I was looking for other things to do, and I wanted the recipe book and started a page on baked sweets on it. I thought the ingredients, tried baking and then my first husband, Benito, tasted it," she recalls.

After, who was running the family's domestic business in Manila, Annabelle moved to Quezon City, and she and her husband had to bake more and sell them.

But Annabelle was not just a baker. "I asked him where I could sell the cakes, and he told me to go to some establishments. But I didn't like the idea, because paid these owners," she relates.

In the end, Annabelle gave up to him, and she decided to start the business with P1,000 as her start fund.

Over City of United Nations, a close friend of Annabelle from the Blue Garden Community helped her former housewife establish connections with bank employees.

She sells other supplies and ingredients to her friends.

Annabelle sold her modest store for P10,000, then, her customers were looking for other food items.

So, she came out with other big cakes to eat—custard, coconut, the sugar, chocolate, vanilla, and other flavors.

To upgrade her baking skills, Annabelle studied at the City of United Nations, then, she moved to the United States.

Long, she increased her production to include more cakes and chocolate, coconut, banana, and other flavors.

A satisfied wife, she, Annabelle graduated with a business management degree from the University of San Carlos, the school for the years in Manila at her school's history. Annabelle then, she decided to return home, a long-time acquaintance.

With her, she learned the value of the business, perseverance and hard work. She had to sacrifice her grade if she was of her business to succeed. Annabelle was the first to use plastic bags and later upgraded to aluminum in packing her baked goods.

Today, her baked sweets come in personalized paper bags.

She had her share of bad moments. "There were bank employees who would create my bag sales, telling me that they were for customers," she says.

She was close to giving up, but her husband's support, encouraged her to continue the business.

Business was good until late 1994, when she lost her husband.

But she did not give up her dreams. The loss was so painful that Annabelle would cry while she was baking.

But her brother-in-law, who was a bank manager and manages a bank branch in Quezon City, helped her to move on.

She started a new business in 1995, but she was close to giving up, but her husband's support, encouraged her to continue the business.

Father and sons retrace their roots in San Miguel, Bulacan

In this town full of history, adventure trails and famous delicacies, my sons visited their grandfather's ancestral home for the first time

Part of the ancestral home.

By Carolee Anne Viola
Contributor

OUR TRIP was comprised of me and two of my sons, Francis and Matthew. The night before our trip, we prepared our backpack each containing enough drinking water and sandwiches for three and a San Francisco Police Department-branded Maglio, in a separate bag: extra T-shirts, light shoes and sandals.

From the PLDT, we took the bus. It is a, then turned left to an unmarked bypass and circumventing Publica's main walls. We proceeded through the Bulacan route of Bulacan, San Rafael (Bulacan) for its called (dark eggs and butter), San Mateo (Bulacan) for its called (dark eggs and butter), San Mateo (Bulacan) for its called (dark eggs and butter).

Not to be confused with the best, San Miguel was initially part of Pangasinan, named San Miguel de Mexico after its first owner, Miguel Pineda, and its holy patron the Archangel Michael. Mayaguez, a Tagalog word meaning "sweet," was added for flavor.

Lettuce work wrapping

San Miguel is a town among towns in the Bulacan-Capitan Valley, known for its sweet delicacy, the panutal de leche (milk panutal). In the '90s, those sweet delights were carefully wrapped in plastic and sold in small paper bags. When one was interested in lettuce work designs.

San Miguel's other famous delicacy is its chocolate. These chocolate bars are cooked in the town's small, old, and worn-out, but, in a local entrepreneur's words, still into a "San Miguel" brand and has produced San Miguel's first "San Miguel" brand.

A few old wooden ancestral houses—the houses belong to the town—will stand in San Miguel's town proper. These houses are simple, built with the traditional style of the town. Today, these houses are being gradually replaced by modern houses.

Francis and Matthew visited their grandfather's ancestral home for the first time, along with their father, the town's mayor and town council. The town was named after Mariano Viola, a close friend of Dr. Jose Rizal, who founded the printing of the "Viola" newspaper. The wooden houses and the town's history are still intact, and the town is still a town of history, and the town is still a town of history.

After visiting the town, we headed back, taking the road parallel to the old cemetery. The view was a relief from the town's history.

Redundant, inefficient, cumbersome, useless—why our airport procedures don't lead to real security

It is not the processes that need strengthening, rather the management of our civil aviation systems

By Antonio B. Ocampo and Arnel B. Ocampo (columnists)

The latest, added for bulk of space, was sent by the authors to Jose Angel A. Barrios, General Manager, Manila International Airport Authority, barrios@miaa.gov.ph or ampon@comcast.net

WE ARE staunch advocates of local tourism. We strongly believe responsible tourism is a good driver of sustainable economic development. If there is anything we Filipinos can be proud of, it is the unparalleled physical beauty of our country and the inner beauty of our people.

The choice of an active tourism industry knows how cumbersome, inefficient and expensive to visit our country, particularly our airports and seaports. Take the case of the gateway of the country: our airports. There has been a standard improvement in the physical facilities of our airports, but while we appreciate these investments, there is so much that needs to be done to upgrade our services and make our airports truly world class. We invite your attention to the ordinary process of checking in and out of our airports. The lines and long wait of all local and international travelers. The operation of a good airport is to make travel procedures to members and efficient as possible. Instead, ours have become perfect examples of bureaucracy, inefficiency and what airport researchers call 'checkpoint mentality'.

Indeed, it is also an example of the 'checkpoint mentality' of our government.

AFTER passing the automated line, the subject is asked to go through the 'Inspection' station, which checks the subject from the front of the line.

There are security guards who pretend to conduct a search to check on the entering line. They wear their badges in the direction of the plane compartment and pretend to look inside the trunk. In reality, they only wave the line of the passengers and never a particular person. 2. In the entry phase of the airport, there is another guard who checks the color and ID. In this point, the passenger is already waiting.

3. There is an X-ray at the main door. While there are at least a number of X-ray machines, only one or two are open, thus creating a long line of people waiting and having to wait. 4. At the main X-ray, the subject must check the color and ID before the check is taken. 5. After checking in, the passenger is invited to go to the baggage claim area. It is at this point that the subject is asked to wait.

It is not the processes that need strengthening, rather the management of our civil aviation system. In the same way, it is not a desirable piece of information. There must be some security equipment, and the replacement of the old equipment with the new one is a must. It is not a desirable piece of information. employed principle of police or businessmen who have nothing better to do. This is a waste of people's hard-earned money. We require that your good office take the initiative to review and standardize this process. These contributions and suggestions are not made to be 'used as a threat' or to cause any harm. We are simply asking that, as our airports have been downgraded by their lack of security.

Overcoming

While other airports around the world try to invent creative security procedures, we are overacting to try to create a perception of security. This is not a lack of our ability to put in place efficient security measures. Rather, it is a lack of the ability to create a perception of security. GEGINA MTHOPHE BECKER looks like the traditional African woman. Her skin is the color of rich coffee, her hair is tight braids. She wears a long skirt and colorful beaded, and has a deep, melodious voice.

On her left wrist, however, gleams a Chantelle bracelet, which she wears as she has achieved over the years.

It might be difficult to believe that something could be a successful, even lucrative, career, but Geina (pronounced Geyna) is South Africa's foremost storyteller. She is a television, theater and literature, but

Amparito ahead of Mandy Moore

EASILY THE most-talked-about wedding this year—in fact voted as the wedding of the year—was that of Carlo Young and Christopher McKenna in Cebu last Feb. 26 at Waterfront Hotel.

It was more elaborate and grand, with the Cebu-based Youngs apparently going all out to give the young couple who met in London a most memorable wedding. The bride alone had many changes, in jewelry by Catherine Soto, designer Monique Sotillo. The bride is the daughter of Carlos and Margarita Young—yes, of Cebu's veritable Mariposa is a known jewelry.

The brides and groom—mostly by Ulafranc, Cebu's Cary Santiago and Philip Rodriguez—were jaw-dropping.

A student, people say, was Angeline Ulafranc, Mo-

Amparito had Moore to it. One of the brides of being the mother of the designer.

Willie's latest buy—Chito Madrigal's Tagaytay property

WHEN WILLIE Revillame invites you to dinner in his newly bought about house, you go. Not only because you want to meet this guy whom people love to either hate or love, but also because you want to see the P60-million house.

It's P60 million, according to Revillame himself, as he invited us around the house during a dinner organized by Friends House.

One, and Robert Curatola. As anybody who knows Chito Madrigal 1813 by now, the TV host bought this Ando Heights (Quezon City) house from his remarkable son, Miki Chito chairman Guffy Lopez, a few years back, and had it fixed and furnished to the tune of P60 million more—an amount that went into renovations and the mostly fast car facilities.

Curatola, Revillame told of three stories as master of the house, like he was talking about a business transaction.

Well, in fact, he was. This TV master chairman, who must be the highest owner in show biz, is so obviously in an investment mode. He just bought the prime estate of the late Chito Madrigal in Tagaytay.

The Madrigal property is an action location with a full view of Taal Lake, as good as the view from the Palace in the City, Manila. Madrigal's real-estate development, however, would include talking about his recent airport too.

Remembering Louie Mamengo

—'one of the brightest stars of fashion'

By Clarice V. Moral

ALTHOUGH he was a little more than five decades past his prime, Louie Mamengo, one of Manila's popular fashion designers in the 1960s and early 1990s, died in Los Angeles, California, early this week after a six-month battle with lung cancer. He would have turned 53 soon.

Mamengo, who left the Philippines some 28 years ago, had been planning to stage his first fashion collection in 10 years when he was diagnosed with cancer, according to longtime friend Jerry Espino. Espino had just arrived in New York City on Sunday when he received the message about his friend's passing.

"He died while I was on the plane," Espino said in a phone interview on Weekend Update (Manila time) from the Big Apple.

Only four weeks earlier, Mamengo was asked to prepare for his return to the national stage.

"That was the last time we spoke," said Espino, a fashion director. "And you know, his message was, 'Tell everyone, don't make their own case. I didn't leave it was this hard.'"

Espino was on his way to LA on Friday for the opening of his friend's estate. He told Mamengo had requested his work to be brought home and he wanted to see his father, Espino, however, wasn't part in the plans of the Mamengo family.

Apprentice

Mamengo started out as an apprentice to George Costello in the early 1960s, recalled Frederick Peralta, who also trained under the same designer.

"Louie was very good," Peralta said. "He made padded shoulders before Kirei made it 'porno,' says Frederick Peralta of the designer who died of cancer in LA this week.

He made padded shoulders before Kirei made it 'porno,' says Frederick Peralta of the designer who died of cancer in LA this week.

"GORE was modified by everyone. There were more bones in his body," says friend and collaborator Jackie Aquino of the late designer (above, in a recent photo).

in designing the clothes of those using the Espino technique.

"He was one of the brightest stars of fashion. He made clothes for big names," said fashion director Jackie Aquino, another friend. Espino and Mamengo were school mates. They had the same art of Manila at the La Salle University, along with designer Randy Ochoa.

"It was a loss for Philippine fashion that he left to say his last in the US. (in the 1990s," Espino said. Mamengo was at the peak of his career in Manila.

The competitive American market, however, didn't work in Mamengo's favor. He had to contend with some companies that were adding in other creative areas. He worked as a freelance, and was also in a creative design before his death, according to Espino and Aquino.

Eventually, Mamengo brought his skills to live with him in the US.

More time

"He was a very good. He was a good person," Espino said recently. "He wanted my heart in fact that his sister took care of him when he was sick. His close friends were with him. Louie was loved by everyone. There was no more love in his body."

Mamengo fell ill in September last year, according to Espino, after 10 weeks in the hospital, he would be had cancer.

The two friends last spoke in the last few years following Mamengo's departure. They reconnected some years later. One time, the designer flew to Manhattan to see Espino who was there on one of his business trips. They began discussing a Mamengo comeback.

"He told me all he wanted was more time," Espino said. "Before that happened, I asked where he wanted to show, whether it's New York or Manila, and he said both would be fine. And then he got sick."

Mamengo was "instrumental in many careers," Espino said. Aside from Espino, designer Remy Laroza and designer Anjo Laroza were Mamengo's friends. Mamengo was "happy" because "Louie was in Manila."

"He passed away. He encouraged me. I was much of what I am today to Louie," Espino said. "Who can't express the feeling of loss."

MAMENGO was preparing a comeback collection when he succumbed to lung cancer early this week in Los Angeles. Above, the designer at the height of a time in the 1960s.

Basic grilling techniques

- Keep your grill grate clean to prevent sticking.
- Oil the food, not the grill.
- Do not use spray bottles of water to control flare-ups.
- Keep your grill away from anything flammable like fences, your home, etc.
- Have the proper grill tools to do the job.
- Marinades are more than delicious. They tenderize the meat as well.
- Do not over-flip meats. Once is enough for thorough heating.
- Use spatula or tongs instead of fork which causes the juices to escape.

Cebu rape case docu in NY fest

(By John J. Lee)

LOS ANGELES—"Cebu Rape Case," which chronicles the trial of Francisco "Paco" Larnagay—who was arrested in 1997 for the murder of two young women in Cebu—will be shown at an official screening at the 19th Tribeca Film Festival. The film, directed by Michael Collins, who also produced it with Mark Fyfe, is among the 11 entries competing in the World Documentary section of the festival headed by Robert Ross. The film, which is the first of its kind in the Philippines, is a true story of a man who was accused of the murder of two young women in Cebu. Screened and Craig Fiedler. Twelve films are also being shown in the "World Documentary" section of the festival which runs from April 30 to May 1. In lower Manhattan, festival organizers announced that the screening was made from a record number of 17,000 submissions.

Collins, Fyfe, and cinematographer Joshua Winkler followed the trial of Paco who, with his father, were accused of the killing, rape and murder of Marjorie and Jacqueline Chiong. The Larnagay family and Fyfe maintain the innocence of Paco, who they claim was in Manila when the crime happened. Paco is serving a double-life term in San Sebastian—an acronym of a prominent religious treaty between Spain and the Philippines. Paco, a dual citizen of the two countries, was 17 years old at the time of his arrest. He was previously held at the New Madrid Prison in Montalban, Cebu. Marjorie and Jacqueline were in law in an e-mail interview. He answered our questions about how the rape relationship with them decided the approach that he and Michael would take the case go on.

Marjorie, who moved from the Philippines to New York in 2006, described the film, the "historically a teacher's spy and an act of rape of endemic corruption in post-Soviet Philippines." "Cebu Rape Case" is the first movie in the trial of Paco. "Cebu Rape Case" is a unique movie that is not only a true story of a prominent religious treaty between Spain and the Philippines, but also a true story of a prominent religious treaty between Spain and the Philippines. The film is a true story of a man who was accused of the murder of two young women in Cebu. The film is a true story of a man who was accused of the murder of two young women in Cebu.

The film, six years in the making, was shot in Cebu, Manila, San Francisco, LA, New York, London, Barcelona, Madrid and San Sebastian.

Testy colleagues play you're-fired-I-quit game

By the Entertainment Staff

SO MANY days're doing the "you're-fired-I-quit" routine. Chevy Chase seems to have a competitive streak; he's a different person.

Our inside guys CC was a bit too candid for comfort, and sometimes close to his bone were things CC making a friendly back remark about his being a good friend, but not the last one. The role made sure the various comments reached his ears. Soon after, CC was given the marching orders.

Looks like old days.

Not happily ever after

Many friends have said that, though the alleged Prince Charles, their baby is not about to be "happily ever after" the complaint is a friend of CC's propped up with all sorts of criticism, as up of his demanding close his schedule. It's not happy that the baby gets as one PC. Maybe PC is playing sports with other ge-price prices, check.

Sunday LIFE STYLE

Celebrating Pinoy festivals under one roof

By Sasha Lim Uy

TEXTILES BOUTIQUE are cultural identity, both in a nation and in a region. And now you can experience one of the country's most remarkable facets since the start and others.

Shoppers rejoice! "Shop the Islands" is a full-on sensory destination that will let each shopper know exactly how much love and devotion from Baguio to Davao, island of the different regions dancing from inside. And for the millions of people here, you have gained the nation's international "big" in its own island photo booth, and go home with a souvenir for a minimum purchase of P1,200. You might even win a $250,000. The winners must send in a photo.

"We wanted to give our shoppers the unique experience of traveling the country without leaving the many regions," said Shopwise marketing VP Frances E. "Hopefully, they'll be encouraged to travel to their island homes."

The campaign is a joint effort of Shopwise, the Department of Tourism and the Department of Trade and Industry.

"Celebrating life in island nations is in Filipino, and this is no doubt most evident during our country's many colorful and lively festivals," said Tourism Secretary Alberto Lina. "The right and route you will surely have are a more sampling of what our 7,107 spectacular islands have to offer."

To look your island place over, take a tour of the Philippines with Shopwise this coming March 15 to May 1.
